An Alliance, Ohio, woman spent three days in jail for calling 911 five times seeking a husband. The dispatcher was flabbergasted by the requests and asked Audrey Scott, "You need to get a husband?" Scott, 57, responded, "Yes." When told that she could face arrest for misusing 911, Scott responded, "Let's do it." Scott was convicted last week of improper use of the 911 system. Bad News Hammers BP's Stock

Shares in company hit 14-year low as oil leak estimates grow

Washington

The stock price of BP plunged more than 15 percent Wednesday to a 14-year low as it became increasingly clear that the amount of oil spewing out of the Deepwater Horizon well is substantially greater than the company or the federal government initially estimated.

Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen, the head of the government's spill response, said BP collected 15,000 barrels of oil (630,000 gallons) from the blown well on Tuesday alone and that a significant amount more was escaping the containment cap into the ocean. Allen said the company was also moving a "mobile drilling unit" to the site that will increase the receiving capacity to 28,000 barrels (or almost 1.2 million gallons) per day.

The quantity of oil spilling into the gulf has been the subject of speculation and controversy for weeks. Early on in the crisis, the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration estimated that 5,000 barrels of oil were leaking per day, but more recently, a government-appointed team of scientists known as the Flow Rate Technical Group estimated the leak at 12,000 to 25,000 barrels per day.

Since the damages and penalties that could be levied against BP are based on the amount of oil released into the Gulf, investors interpreted Wednesday's news as substantially increasing the potential liability of the company.

Along the Gulf coast, the damage to wildlife is becoming more apparent by the day. A wildlife rescue center in Louisiana says it has obtained more than five times as many oily birds in the past few days as in the previous six weeks combined.

The Drill Is Gone

Just a quarter of Americans back expanding offshore drilling in the wake of the BP oil spill, and most fault federal regulators for the environmental disaster in the Gulf of Mexico, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News poll. Most Americans now want fewer offshore wells (31 percent) or the amount kept at current levels (41 percent). (TWP)

Phil Weiss, an oil analyst with Argus Research in New York, said momentum was working against BP as news from the Gulf gets progressively worse. He said he still thought the company could survive, "but there's more doubt in my mind than there was a week ago. Momentum is a powerful thing."

President: Blockade Of Gaza Not Sustainable

Washington

President Obama called Wednesday for sharply limiting Israel's blockade of the Gaza Strip in the wake of the botched Israeli naval raid that's straining U.S. and Israeli relations around the world.

The White House also announced a $400 million aid package for Gaza and the West Bank.

"The situation in Gaza is unsustainable," Obama said as he met with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas. He said the attention of the world is on the problem because of the "tragedy" of the Israeli raid that killed nine people trying to bring in supplies.

Obama called for tailoring Israel's broad blockade on goods entering the Gaza Strip so that arms are kept out, but not items needed for daily life and development.

"The key here is making sure that Israel's security needs are met but that the needs of people in Gaza are also met," Obama said. (AP)

CONTROVERSY

The Empire State Building's owner says he won't light the skyscraper for Mother Teresa because of a policy against honoring individual religious figures. Anthony Malkin's statement Wednesday comes amid an uproar over the decision not to illuminate the building in blue and white lights in August on what would have been the late Nobel Prize winner's 100th birthday. A lay group, the Catholic League, made the request in February and was denied. (AP)

Women, for a Change?

Voters' disgruntled mood is giving a lift to female politicians

Washington

It's looking like a new "year of the woman" in politics.

Eighteen years after a few glass ceilings were broken, hundreds of female candidates have set their sights on Congress, governorships and state legislatures, and a significant number racked up big wins in Tuesday's primaries. Republican women, in particular, served notice to the old boys of the party.

In California, two wealthy businesswomen who had reached the top of the corporate world, Meg Whitman and Carly Fiorina, captured the GOP nomination for governor and Senate, respectively. In Nevada, state legislator Sharron Angle seized the GOP Senate nod and will face Democratic Leader Harry Reid. South Carolina State Rep. Nikki Haley brushed aside allegations of infidelity to grab the commanding spot in the GOP gubernatorial runoff.

Nikki Haley is likely to become the GOP gubernatorial candidate in South Carolina.

One of the night's biggest winners was two-term Arkansas Sen. Blanche Lincoln, who scored a narrow victory over liberal Democrat Lt. Gov. Bill Halter.

In 1992, voters sent record numbers of women to Congress — 24 to the House and five to the Senate. Women angered by the predominantly male Senate's questioning of Anita Hill, who had accused Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment, decided to make their point by ousting the men.

Fast-forward to 2010.

Despite women's strides, politics remains a man's world. That could benefit this year's female candidates as a frustrated electorate has rejected the establishment.

"Many women are running and taking advantage of this moment," said Debbie Walsh, director of the Center for American Women and Politics. "When voters are looking for something new and something different, women can really fit that bill because they aren't the status quo." LIZ SIDOTI (AP)

Sources: FBI Paid Van der Sloot $25K in Sting

Man may have taken cash to Peru, where he is slaying suspect

Washington

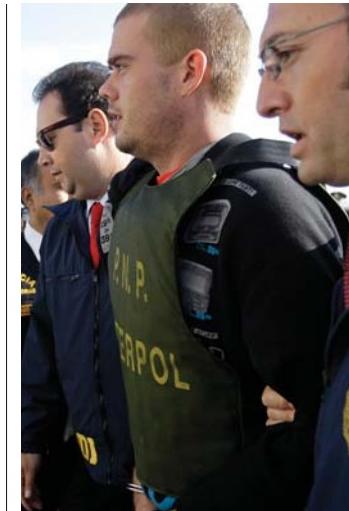

The FBI thought it was closing in on Joran van der Sloot in the notorious Natalee Holloway missing-teenager case, and he was paid $25,000 in a sting operation. But when the agency delayed his arrest to help build a murder case, he took the money and headed for Peru, where, authorities say, he now has confessed to killing a different young woman.

The investigation of Van der

Sloot in the Alabama teenager's case simply was not far enough along to have him arrested, the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office in Birmingham said Wednesday.

Federal law enforcement officials and a private investigator say the work on Holloway's disappearance was revived about six weeks ago when Van der Sloot reached out to someone close to the Alabama teenager's mother and requested $250,000 in exchange for disclosing the location of Holloway's body on the island of Aruba.

Federal officials said Wednesday that Holloway's mother contacted authorities in Alabama, and the FBI set a sting operation in motion targeting Van der Sloot. About $15,000 was wired to a bank account Van der Sloot controlled, officials said. Bo Dietl, a private investigator who has been working with an attorney for the Hollaways, said Van der Sloot received an additional $10,000 in cash.

Van der Sloot was the last person seen with Holloway before she vanished during a trip to the Dutch Caribbean island on May 30, 2005.

Health Activists Eye World Cup

Experts, leaders urge safe sex in nation with most HIV/AIDS cases

Johannesburg

Slathered in face paint, toting samba drums and waving national flags, the world's most ardent soccer fans are streaming into South Africa for the 2010 World Cup. And they're being met by a host of reminders not to forget the tournament's most essential accessory: a condom.

South Africa has the world's highest incidence of HIV/AIDS, with 5.7 million of its 49.1 million residents afflicted.

The nation's health advocates have long eyed the advent of the world's biggest sporting event as an opportunity to draw global attention to the crisis, stress the importance of HIV testing and promote safe-sex practices — not just among the 300,000 visitors who aren't necessarily known for prudent behavior, but among their own residents, too.

South African soccer fans blow their vuvuzelas in Johannesburg on Wednesday.

But as Friday's kickoff approaches, those at the forefront of the campaign say FIFA, soccer's world governing body, has been half-hearted in linking South Africa's most pressing health issue to its grandest event — a charge FIFA officials deny.

"What I hoped I would see at the World Cup would be very visible messaging," Mark Heywood, deputy chairman of the South African National AIDS Council, said in an interview Tuesday. "Obviously, you don't want to drown out the World Cup. ... We're simply suggesting: 'Know your HIV status. Practice safe sex."

Heywood's comments followed a three-day duel of news releases that started Saturday, when a consortium of 10 South African HIV/AIDS groups accused FIFA of blocking plans to distribute condoms and health information outside its 10 World Cup venues.

The approximate percentage of South Africans who have HIV/AIDS. In some regions, one in five adults is HIV-positive.

In Cape Town, for example, guests at 30 hotels will be given free condoms specially packaged for the World Cup with the slogan, "Play It Safe in Cape Town."

"It's one thing to say to people, 'Don't get involved in prostitution,'" Johannesburg city council spokesman Virgil James said. "Yet we know there will be our own residents, as well as soccer lovers, who will engage in that activity. So, we're saying, 'If you do, at least use a condom. Protect yourself.'" Afghan Crash Kills U.S. Soldiers

Kandahar, Afghanistan

Four U.S. soldiers were killed in southern Afghanistan on Wednesday when their helicopter was shot down, officials said, and a fifth member of the military from the NATO coalition was killed in a roadside bombing.

Wednesday's attacks added to what has been one of the deadliest weeks for the U.S.-led international military force in the nearly nine-year war. Since Sunday, 23 NATO troops have been killed in Afghanistan.

Allied aircraft crashes in Afghanistan due to enemy fire have been extremely rare during nearly nine years of war. The lack of Taliban surface-to-air capacity has given the U.S. and other foreign powers a major tactical advantage over insurgents, enabling them to fly at relatively low altitudes, even over insurgent strongholds in the south and the east.

In contrast, the U.S. decision in the 1980s to supply mujahedeen in Afghanistan with Stinger missiles marked one of the major turning points of the Islamic rebels' fight against Soviet forces. Russian aircraft were forced to fly at much higher altitudes — or risk being shot down.

In Wednesday's incident, the BBC reported, insurgents used a rocket-propelled grenade to shoot down the chopper. Daud Ahmed, the spokesman for provincial governor, said the helicopter was shot down around noon in Sangin district, which is in southern Helmand province.

Helmand is one of the Taliban strongholds that U.S. military officials hope to secure with the deployment of 30,000 additional troops this year.

Lt. Cmdr. Todd Vician, a NATO spokesman, said the four soldiers killed in the helicopter crash were Americans.

Military officials did not disclose the nationality of the fifth soldier who was killed or say where in southern Afghanistan the soldier encountered the roadside bomb.

Mexico, U.S. Probe Death

U.S. Border Patrol agents are accused of killing Mexican teen

Mexico City

Mexican leaders on Wednesday condemned the fatal shooting of a Mexican teenager by the U.S. Border Patrol at the international border in El Paso, as U.S. officials scrambled to investigate the circumstances surrounding the second killing of a Mexican by a U.S. agent in two weeks.

According to preliminary reports from U.S. officials, Border Patrol agents on bicycles were pelted with rocks while trying to apprehend migrants trying to cross illegally from Ciudad Juarez into El Paso near a downtown bridge, an area known for drug and human trafficking, and monitored by video cameras and patrols.

U.S. officials said an unidentified Border Patrol agent was defending himself as the officers came under attack. The teen, Sergio Adrian Hernandez Guereca, 15, was shot in the head Tuesday, according to Mexican officials. Both governments and the FBI are trying to determine whether Hernandez posed a credible threat to the U.S. agents.

Relatives of Sergio Adrian Hernandez Guereca attend his funeral on Wednesday.

Meanwhile ...

Mexico's navy seized 45 pounds of powerful explosives Wednesday in a bohemian residential neighborhood in the capital after exchanging information with U.S. authorities. Four Mexicans suspected of links to organized crime were being questioned after a pre-dawn raid on a hostel. Officials said the explosives are the type used in demolition. (AP)

Police in Chihuahua state said the teen died on the Mexican side of the border. Investigators retrieved a

.40-caliber bullet casing.

U.S. officials said the Border Patrol agent has been placed on administrative leave, and a Department of Homeland Security spokesman issued a statement saying the U.S. "regrets the loss of life."

Shortly after Guereca was shot, Mexican soldiers arrived at the scene and pointed their guns at the Border Patrol agents across the riverbank while bystanders screamed insults and hurled rocks and firecrackers, FBI spokeswoman Andrea Simmons told the Associated Press Wednesday. She said the agents were forced to withdraw. (THE WASHINGTON POST/AP)

Israel Lets More Food Into Gaza

Jerusalem

Israel took a first step Wednesday to temper the uproar caused by its deadly high-seas raid on a blockade-busting flotilla by allowing in potato chips, cookies, spices and other previously banned food items into the Gaza Strip.

But the things Gazans need most — cement, steel and other materials to rebuild their war-ravaged territory — are still mostly banned, and critics denounced the move as insignificant.

Instead of easing international criticism of Israel following the May 31 raid that killed nine pro-

Palestinian activists, Wednesday's decision appeared to focus even more attention on its three-year-old blockade of impoverished Gaza and the seemingly arbitrary decision-making about which goods are allowed in.

Maxwel Gaylard, the U.N.'s senior humanitarian official in the Palestinian territories, said Israel's move was insufficient.

"A modest expansion of the restrictive list of goods allowed into Gaza falls well short of what is needed. We need a fundamental change and an opening of crossings for commercial goods."

A Maryland board has approved buying 1,062 slot machines for the state's first casino for $49 million.

The Board of Public Works voted 2-1 on Wednesday to approve the contract to buy machines from six different vendors.

ESPN Zone Set to Close

Disney to shutter five restaurants due to effect of recession

Washington

The Walt Disney Co. said Wednesday that it is closing five ESPN Zone restaurants — in Baltimore, Chicago, New York, Las Vegas and Washington, D.C. — saying the economics of the business were “very challenging.”

The company said that after Tuesday, the only ESPN Zone restaurants to remain open will be in Los Angeles and Anaheim, Calif.

The sports bar and restaurant chain — which has arcade games and big-screen TVs, and serves up burgers and beer — was launched in Baltimore’s Inner Harbor in July 1998 to expose fans to the brand.

ESPNZone restaurants will close in D.C., Baltimore, New York, Chicago and Las Vegas.

But a review of the business over the last 18 months showed it was suffering from the effect of the recession as fewer people dined out. The first signs of trouble emerged when Disney closed ESPN Zones in Atlanta and Denver last year.

“We didn’t see the business turning [around] quickly,” said ESPN senior vice president Rick Alessandri in an interview. “It was a call, unfortunately, we had to make.” (AP)

— IRANIAN PRESIDENT MAHMOUD AHMADINEJAD, WHO SAID THE U.N.’S LATEST SANCTIONS AGAINST HIS COUNTRY ARE LITTLE MORE THAN AN IRRITANT.

Business as Usual for Iran

The U.N.’s new sanctions are unlikely to dissuade Tehran’s nuclear ambitions

Vienna, Austria

Washington calls the latest U.N. sanctions on Iran a diplomatic victory, a show of unity by the world’s big powers and a powerful way to prevent the country from making nuclear weapons.

Iran says the sanctions are an unfair attempt to keep it from developing a peaceful civilian energy program.

Whatever Iran’s ultimate goal, it is clear that, like three previous sets of sanctions, the new measures are unlikely to crimp a nearly mature nuclear program that can be turned to both peaceful purposes and making atomic weapons.

The new sanctions authorize countries to inspect cargo to and from Iran; strengthen an arms embargo by banning transfers of more types of conventional arms and missiles; expand restrictions on Iran’s access to nuclear technology; add more institutions to a financial sanctions watch list and urge “vigilance” in doing business with any organization linked to Iran’s Revolutionary Guard.

President Obama said the sanctions send “an unmistakable message about the international community’s commitment to stopping the spread of nuclear weapons.”

But because many aspects of a civilian nuclear program can also serve military purposes, Iran already has most of what it would need to make such arms. And the cost of getting China and Russia to OK the

The U.N. Vote

Strange Allies

The U.N. resolution was approved by a vote of 12-2 with Lebanon abstaining and Brazil and Turkey voting “no.” Turkey and Brazil, both non-permanent council members, brokered a fuel-swap agreement with Iran that they offered as an alternative solution to concerns Tehran may be enriching uranium for nuclear weapons. The sanctions put Iran in the unusual position of bashing key allies China and Russia. Both countries voted for the resolution, and either could have vetoed it. Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad warned Russian leaders last month “to correct themselves, and not let the Iranian nation consider them among its enemies.” (AP) sanctions was the removal of provisions that would have really hurt Iran, such as an embargo on Iranian oil or a ban on gasoline sales.

The International Atomic Energy Agency, in its newest tally last week, said Iran was now running nearly 4,000 uranium-enriching centrifuges and had amassed nearly 2.5 tons of low-enriched uranium that can be used for fuel, once Iran’s first reactor goes on-line, which is planned for sometime this year.

That’s also enough for two nuclear bombs if enriched to weapons-grade levels. Iran recently began enriching to higher levels for what it says will be research reactor fuel.

The process is turning out less than weapons-grade uranium. If Iran should decide to pursue a weapon, it would take less work to turn higher-enriched feedstock into fissile warhead material.

It will be hard to keep Iran from obtaining more nuclear technology. Many of the companies and entities mentioned in the new sanctions list have already been subject to sanctions, and Iran has found ways in the past to circumvent them.

“I don’t think anybody thinks these particular sanctions are going to trigger Iran to give up its nuclear program,” said Sharon Squassoni of the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Iran’s U.N. Ambassador Mohammad Khazaee accused Western powers of abusing the Security Council to attack Iran. “No amount of pressure and mischief will be able to break our nation’s determination to pursue and defend its legal and inalienable rights,” Khazaee said.

GEORGE JAHN (AP)

Breakdown: Iran’s Nuclear History

THE REVEAL: Secret Iranian nuclear activities were first revealed eight years ago when an Iranian dissident group provided evidence of a nascent government program of uranium enrichment—the technology that can make both nuclear fuel and fissile warhead material.

EARLY SANCTIONS: Iran resisted years of calls to permanently stop enriching, prompting a December 2006 U.N. Security Council resolution that called for member nations to prevent the supply, sale or transfer of all materials and technology that could contribute to Iran’s nuclear activities. But, by then, the efforts already appeared to be too late.

FULLY SUPPLIED: Building on black market components and know-how, Iran already had most of what it needed to maintain—and expand—its enrichment capacities by the time the U.N. acted. And clandestine deliveries of equipment continued despite the sanctions—as reflected in dozens of convictions worldwide of people found guilty of nuclear smuggling to Iran.

STILL RESISTANT: Subsequent U.N. resolutions in March 2007 and March 2008 repeated demands that Iran come clean on unexplained aspects of its nuclear program that hardened suspicions it might be interested in nuclear arms. But Iran refused—and continued expanding enrichment. (AP)

—STEPHEN STRASBURG, WHO KNOWS THE SCRUTINY WON'T STOP DESPITE HIS SPECTACULAR DEBUT WITH THE NATIONALS ON TUESDAY NIGHT.

JONATHAN NEWTON/TWP

To Stephen Strasburg, his major league debut was just a blur. To Nationals fans, it was a game that finally gave them reason to believe their team is on the right track.

What's Next for Strasburg?

Forget Disney World; phenom sets sights on start in Cleveland

The Nationals

Three hundred and sixty-four days after he was drafted, when the slow build of anticipation had finally reached its frenzied, fanatical peak, Stephen Strasburg stepped onto the mound at Nationals Park and fed the legend.

The 21-year-old, pumping 100 mph fastballs and bending, diving curves, struck out 14 batters in an unprecedented major-league debut, turning hyperbole into reality and making Washington — for one night at least — baseball's epicenter.

Where does he go next? Cleveland. It ain't Disney World.

Strasburg's next start comes Sunday on the road against the Indians, and with the ceaseless questions

D.C. Relishes Strasburg

The day after receiving his honorary shaving cream pie to the face — topped with the silver Elvis wig that goes to the Nationals' game MVP each night — Stephen Strasburg was the talk of the town Wednesday. From the Senate floor to D.C. restaurants, the subject couldn't be avoided. It started with Sens. Harry Reid and Mitch McConnell finding a middle ground lauding the pitcher. Soon, Strasburgers — including BGR's patty topped with a hot dog and smothered with aged Vermont cheddar cheese — popped up. No wonder Tuesday's game set a ratings record for MASN. (EXPRESS) about his debut finally, mercifully past, his next challenge is mastering the structured monotony of life as a big-league pitcher.

Less than half an hour after the final out on Tuesday, Strasburg was talking about throwing his between-starts bullpen session and about studying Cleveland's hitters to develop a game plan for his next outing. Nationals coaches didn't bother him with those details before his first start.

"They just wanted me to go out there and enjoy it," Strasburg said. "So, that's going to be a new experience, to really make up a plan to attack the Indians' hitters."

Of course, it was only half-true that Strasburg threw his 14-strikeout gem without a game plan. Behind the plate was 39-year-old Ivan Rodriguez, who over a 20-year career has come up with a few ideas for using a pitcher's strengths to exploit a hitter's weaknesses.

His knowledge is a resource Strasburg plans to mine as he makes each subsequent start.

"It really means a lot to start my career with a future Hall of Famer catching me," he said.

In Washington, Strasburg's debut — bringing with it a sudden influx of about 18,000 extra fans — was a singular event. One night of sublime baseball.

The Nationals hope it becomes something more, that success begets success and the excitement further fuels a team that, after back-to-back last-place finishes, is finally flirting with respectability.

Short of a playoff run, it will be difficult to replicate the hysteria of Strasburg's debut. And the rookie will pitch only once every five days. Which leaves manager Jim Riggleman with one lament: "You can't clone him." DEREK TURNER

Strasburg Makes A Grand Entrance

Lastings Milledge was the first to look foolish. That's nothing new to Nationals fans who sat in misery as the talented outfielder played his way out of the nation's capital last year.

All the other Pirates who flailed away helplessly were another matter altogether. This Strasburg guy can pitch a little, huh?

In setting a team record with 14 strikeouts in one of the greatest debuts in baseball history, Stephen Strasburg somehow surpassed the hype.

It's like Washington is "The Matrix" and Neo has just realized he can stop bullets with his mind.

Strasburg's arrival really is a game changer. Every five days, there is going to be excitement over who takes the hill for the Nationals.

The bad news for Strasburg is he set the bar too high. How can he surpass that outing?

The bad news for Strasburg is now he's set the bar too high. How can he possibly surpass that outing? Throw a no-hitter, I suppose. It doesn't seem out of the question.

For years, everyone talked about the right-hander's explosive fastball, and it was as good as advertised. But how about that wicked curveball? I didn't see that coming — and neither did the Pirates.

The rest of baseball will get video of Strasburg, who surely won't dominate every start. But with someone of his ability, the first goal for opponents is just to not look outmatched.

John Wall, the Wizards' presumptive No. 1 draft pick, should take note. That's how you make an entrance.

Bryant-Fisher Friendship Propels Lakers

Pro Basketball

Kobe Bryant and Derek Fisher were a good pair when they first came into the NBA together, winning three titles with the Los Angeles Lakers. They're even better now, having forged a friendship that belied the differences in their personalities and their skills.

"It's not because our games are similar; it's not because of talent similarities or any of that," Fisher said Wednesday.

"It's just that we've experienced a lot of good and bad things together. Because we've been through those fires, we're just comfortable relying on each other."

A tough and emotional point guard with a history of clutch performances, Fisher made five baskets in the fourth quarter to lead the Lakers to a 91-84 victory over Boston on Tuesday night and a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven NBA finals.

His signature play this time wasn't a long-distance heave — like the one he sank against San Antonio with 0.4 seconds left in 2004.

Instead, Fisher helped clinch the victory when he followed through on a breakaway layup before being flattened by three Celtics. Fisher, who's 6-foot-1 and 210 pounds, converted the three-point play to turn it into a seven-point game. "He's very, very, very, very tough — mentally and physically," Bryant said. "He doesn't back down from anything or anyone." JIMMY GOLEN (AP)

All the World Cup's a Stage for the U.S.

Americans have one shot to demonstrate how far they've come

Johannesburg

The U.S. national soccer team has accomplished quite a bit over the past four years. There was the 2007 CONCACAF Gold Cup title won with a rousing 2-1 defeat of Mexico, a first-place finish in the regional World Cup qualifiers and, of course, the win over Spain in last summer's run to second in the Confederations Cup.

But to most of this country and the rest of the world, that's all filler. The World Cup finals are what matter, and in their last appearance, the Yanks clearly were overwhelmed by the occasion. They were too timid in a 3-0 loss to the Czech Republic, then overcompensated against a beatable Italian team and finished the brutal 1-1 tie with just nine players. After a 2-1 loss to Ghana, the Americans were eliminated.

The ensuing search for a big-name coach failed, and Bob Bradley emerged as the default choice. The former D.C. United assistant and manager of three other MLS teams has presided over a reboot of the national side, which now is anchored by players who've moved overseas to test themselves in Europe's top leagues. The hope is that an environment featuring cutthroat competition for playing time and intense scrutiny will help forge a U.S. team more capable of handling the rigors of a World Cup.

Although many members launched their careers in MLS, only four — including Landon Donovan — currently play in the domestic league. GK Tim Howard, MF Clint Dempsey and F Jozy Altidore are among the eight who play in England. MF Michael Bradley and D Steve Cherundolo star in Germany, and captain Carlos Bocanegra moved from England to France. Others play in Italy, Scotland and even Mexico.

This U.S. team may be younger, but it boasts considerable weekin, week-out big-game experience that should help against England in the June 12 opener and subsequent first-round matches against unheralded Slovenia (June 18) and Algeria (June 23).

Last summer versus Spain, the U.S. demonstrated its improvement and showed it could win any given game. Now it must do so when it really counts, when the whole world is watching. "Most teams at the World Cup set the bar at getting out of their group. And that'll be the same for us," Donovan said. "At that point, we know from our experience last year that we can compete with anyone. And we'll take it from there." BRIAN STRAUS

It's what you feel inside

on the spot

British-born author and journalist Christopher Hitchens has never shied away from tackling difficult subjects with his writing. In fact, he kicked up more controversy than most authors do in a lifetime with two of his books, "The Missionary Position: Mother Teresa in Theory and Practice" and "God Is Not Great: How Religion Poisons Everything." With his latest tome, "Hitch 22," Hitchens takes on perhaps his most difficult subject ever: himself.

Why at this point did you decide to write a memoir?

Well, the truthful answer would be that I was asked to do so and realized that I was about to turn 60. And I thought, "Why not?" While

I was pondering it, the question people always asked was, "Isn't it a bit soon?" But I thought, "Well, you can't leave it until it's too late, either."

Did you find writing about yourself a bigger challenge than writing about other people or issues?

Oh, much harder. And indeed a lot harder than I thought, because if you're writing the sort of stuff I tend to write, it involves making an argument, or laying out a case, shall we say, which you're not doing when you write about yourself. The advantage of it is that no one else can tell how bad it is because it's very hard to check — whereas if I was writing about somebody else, people could point out all kinds of shortcomings.

Did you find yourself focusing more on incidents that shaped your worldview in an effort to perhaps explain where you've been coming from all these years?

Yes, once I'd got out of the way certain essential things. I thought I would have to write a chapter about each of my parents, for example. But after that, where possible, I try and locate myself in an interesting country, say, or in some interesting time period or ideological battles. And when I'm not doing that, I was trying to write about myself in relation to other people who I'm sure are interesting so I can bask in their reflected glory. TONY SCLAFANI

The Man Who Fell to Earth

R. Buckminster Fuller's humanist vision comes to life

Stage

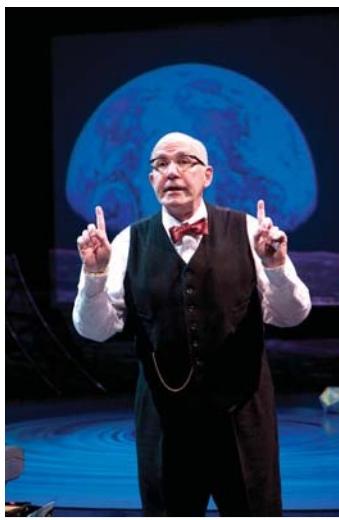

One doesn't normally think of scientists as warm, fuzzy types. But Buckminster Fuller — as portrayed by Rick Foucheux in Arena Stage's production of D.W. Jacobs' "R. Buckminster Fuller: The History (and Mystery) of the Universe" — is all heart.

Underneath the scientist's bow tie and buttoned-up vest is a man with an unabashedly squishy center who declares humanity's purpose thusly: "We're here for each other." Sure, he is also given to statements like, "I don't know why I've been invited to speak to people as ignorant as you," but you expect that from one of the most innovative minds of the 20th century.

The one-man show encapsulates the life and ideas of the futurist who developed the concept of Spaceship Earth and the geodesic dome (as in Epcot Center) and championed the idea of sustainability. He aims to "bridge the gap between scientists and humanists," using his theories to suggest a means of eliminating world hunger, for example.

The autobiographical aspect of the monologue moves from the humorous (Fuller's expulsions from Harvard) to the tragic (his daughter's death at a young age). These events provide the backdrop for Fuller's humanism and his decision to apply his study to improving the state of mankind.

Foucheux spends more than two hours illustrating Fuller's complex theories and philosophies. It's an interactive multimedia production that incorporates props from geometrical shapes to an overhead projector and even requires audience participation. ERIN TROMPETER

Sweet Things

Ace of cakes Warren Brown expands his empire with a delicious new book

Local Heroes

Warren Brown can easily list some of his life's most formative moments. The vision he had of his daughter — before she was born — spending time with him in the kitchen, inquiring what was for dinner. The curiosity of fellow passengers on a flight to New York City regarding what kind of cake he had on a plate covered in plastic wrap. And the memories that flooded over him while he was making a cake for a former boss, an experience that drove him to his career switch.

"The emotion, for whatever reason, was rooted in putting oranges on the cake, and it made me think of oranges when I was a kid and running track, and our coach letting us jump in and grab oranges after a long run, and it made me think of childhood friends and family," Brown said.

There's a cake for every state (and D.C.) in Brown's new book, which features popular classics like Boston Cream Pie and regional recipes like Smith Island Cake from Maryland.

"I HAD THIS IDEA FOR THE BOOK SO EARLY ON IN MY CAREER OF CAKELOVE. ... SO WHENEVER I WOULD TRAVEL, I WOULD JUST KIND OF PICK UP RECIPES AND PICK UP STORIES."

"What I took away from that moment was the idea that I could see my future and I could really push myself to the limits so I could live out and fulfill my potential through cake. If I worked with cake, if I made cake, if I made it a part of my life — and I felt spurred and a little shaken and scared, and I knew it would not be an easy path. ... But it was one worth pursuing."

For Brown, the risk of quitting his job practicing law and pursuing a recently discovered passion has undeniably paid off. The founder and owner of Love Café and CakeLove bakery opened his first shop in 2002. In the years since, Brown has opened six more bakeries in the D.C. metro area and is expanding his local baked-goods empire further with a free mobile app available on iTunes and a new cookbook, "United Cakes of America: Recipes Celebrating Every State."

In "United Cakes of America," the follow-up to his 2008 cookbook, "Cake Love: How to Bake Cakes From Scratch," Brown highlights a recipe from each state, plus the District and Puerto Rico. These include classics, such as red velvet, and regional treats such as Texas sheet cake and Mississippi mud cake. Brown will discuss the book at the Borders in Silver Spring at 2 p.m. on Saturday.

"I had this idea for the book so early on in my career of CakeLove — this was back in 2003, 2004," Brown said. "So whenever I would travel, I would just kind of pick up recipes and pick up stories."

Part of the cookbook's appeal is its balance of well- and lesser-known recipes, which Brown hopes will encourage people to branch out into new dishes, like the jalapeño cheddar cheesecake.

"It tastes like one time I had Velveeta nachos when I was in college," Brown said of the bizarre-sounding concoction. "It's like a big dish of massive super-nachos, with a whole bunch of sour cream, after the party, where it's all mashed together."

But don't expect to see slices of it — or most of the cookbook's other recipes — at any of the area's seven CakeLove locations. Though the stores carry dishes similar to those in the book, such as devil's food cake and strawberry shortcake, most of the recipes are meant to be tried out at home, Brown said.

"For people that don't know what they are doing in the kitchen or that don't get into it because they feel it's daunting or it's not worthwhile, it's not that I want to shake them, but I think there's a lot that they're missing," Brown said. "I'm not out to change the world and make everyone a cook ... but there are a lot of people that need a change in their diet, and they all need to get to it."

And though finding time in his schedule to just brainstorm new ideas is becoming a challenge — especially because he mostly wants to spend time with his wife and 4-month-old daughter, which is "a thrill and it's a privilege" — Brown is already planning a brunch-themed cookbook for release next year. After all, they can't all eat cake.

"I want people to know that I want them to get into the kitchen and make stuff, and cake is a great place to start and a great place to be and to end up, but I know that's not realistic, that people are only going to make cake," Brown said. "There's other stuff out there that I make in the world that I think is really good, and I'd like to be able to share that with people." ROXANA HADADI

A Different Kind of Blue

A new retrospective traces the impact of Yves Klein's short but blazing career

Museums

Though just 34 when he died in 1962, Yves Klein managed to produce a large body of work across a range of media. The French artist's prolific career may have ended abruptly when he suffered a heart attack, but the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden's "Yves Klein: With the Void, Full Powers," the first major retrospective of the artist's work in the United States since 1982, shows how his influence endures.

Co-organized by the Hirshhorn and Minneapolis' Walker Art Center, "Yves Klein" is huge — about 200 works are on display, and together they present a comprehensive exploration of Klein's career.

"Klein came at a moment when Artist Yves Klein merged conceptual art with painting, working with custom pigments and elements like air and water.

"Klein suddenly appeared on the scene as a leader ... and he had a new kind of approach."

els coated themselves in International Klein Blue paint and rolled onto sheets of paper to make prints with their bodies. Klein tried to record human energy with this series, and an accompanying video shows how he created the pieces.

Klein's emphasis on the color blue — and its associations with sky and water — is clear throughout the exhibit, but other elements crop up as well. His fire paintings, in which he used fire alone or fire combined with paint, are golden studies of creation and destruction.

Europe was in the aftermath of war, and many artists were still digesting that," says exhibition curator Kerry Brougher. "Klein suddenly appeared on the scene as a leader ... and he had a new kind of approach that seemed so much more utopian and positive in spirit."

Brougher says that Klein "was creating the sense that things would move forward," and he "foreshadowed what would develop with conceptual art and installation art."

The retrospective begins with Klein's monochrome paintings — including those in his signature color, International Klein Blue — and leads into the Anthropometries, among his best-known works. In them, nude female mod-

Source's Stage of Development

The Source Festival shines a light on D.C.'s rising stars

Stage

The arrival of summer means it's festival season, and from beer to bands, there's an event for every fancy.

Theater buffs can get their kicks over the course of the next three weeks, as 300 artists descend on D.C. to take part in the third annual Source Festival. The festival — the reincarnation of the late Washington Theater Festival — will showcase artists as they perform varied and versatile forms of theater during each week of the event's run.

The Source Festival features a slate of original short plays and collaborations.

The fest kicks off with a week of 18 original, 10-minute plays. The second week will feature the culmination of what producer Jenny McConnell Frederick describes as "artistic blind dates." These "dates" consist of 12 selected artists who have never previously collaborated and were first brought together in the fall to create four pieces to perform at the festival. Finally, the third week will be composed of three full-length plays.

According to Frederick, the festival not only promotes the arts, but also serves as a bridge between rising stars and those who have already established themselves within the theater community.

"One of the major components of the festival is the bringing together of early-career artists, of later-career artists," she said, "to create a synergy and to help launch some careers in Washington."

Autoharp Nouveau

District alt-rockers Typefighter put a retro twang into modern Americana

Music

Before purchasing one on a whim in a Peoria, Ill., antique shop, Ryan McLaughlin had never played an autoharp before. In fact, the most exposure he'd had to one was seeing it played in the movies "A Mighty Wind" and "Walk the Line."

But after he began writing country-influenced songs on the instrument, its old-fashioned sound became the basis for his folk-pop outfit, Typefighter.

"I'd been a bass player for so long, and having this totally different approach and [writing songs] on a totally foreign instrument was invigorating," he said. "There's something about using these types of instruments that almost creates a sense of timelessness. It's a very comfortable, very homey feel."

Typefighter initially began as a completely different endeavor, though. McLaughlin had also been working on a collection of self-described "stoner pop" songs using merely a bass and a loop pedal. He enlisted Erik Anderson, a colleague at local sushi restaurant Sticky Rice, to collaborate on a post-work jam session at his house, but the meeting yielded uninspiring results.

"It didn't go that well — it was pretty awful," McLaughlin said, laughing. "We didn't know each other very well. Our chemistry wasn't quite there."

Months later, Anderson began to record McLaughlin's country songs and the collaboration grew. The first track they worked on together, the dreamy "Ocean Floor," remains the band's most popular song.

They transferred the moniker of Typefighter to the project and fleshed out its current line-up to a five-piece band including John Crum, Mary Voutsas and Typefighter built its sound around the dulcet tones of an uncommon but traditional instrument — the autoharp.

"There's something about using these types of instruments that almost creates a sense of timelessness. It's a ... very homey feel."

Will Waikart. Anderson says the sound of the autoharp has set the tone for everything the band has produced since.

"Ryan has a certain twang to his voice and there are traditional folk-country elements, but it maintains a modern certain pop sensibility," he said.

Since then, the band has released an EP and embarked on two full tours. The band's month-long national tour last summer was plagued by food poisoning and mismatched bookings (the band's sound often clashed with the hardcore bands they were paired with), but their recent trek to South by Southwest was a smoother, more positive experience.

The upcoming show at the Rock and Roll Hotel is Typefighter's first headlining show at a major D.C. club. DAN MILLER

On a Chillwave of Mutilation

Neon Indian shows a high fidelity to the lo-fi aesthetic

Music

Oh, to be young and a rising indie rock star. Barely a year removed from recording Neon Indian's breakthrough debut, "Psychic Chasms," 22-year-old Alan Palomo is still gaining perspective on his newfound success.

Written and recorded (mostly) in one month last May, "Psychic Chasms" has positioned Neon

Indian as a leader in the burgeoning chillwave movement — lo-fi synth-based recordings with big, hooky choruses and washed-out vocals. A close cousin to Palomo's other project, shimmering '70s-style synth-pop act VEGA, "Psychic Chasms" works as one continuous 30-minute piece, replete with transitions and even an album-closing reprise.

"That's always been a huge thing for me: creating music that has a narrative or has cinematic qualities," Palomo said.

Palomo's penchant for sampling particularly colors the record's reverb-drenched haze.

"I definitely have an ambivalence about sampling to a certain extent because there's a lot of things about it that create this incredibly precarious, fragile line between artistic interpretation and flat-out using something," he admitted. But, he continued, "in general, music is becoming so referential that it almost makes sense to recontextualize things that already exist."

Deep Southern Dance Party

The sun shines for Louisiana band BeauSoleil at Wolf Trap's Swamp Romp

Music

BeauSoleil doesn't play shows; the band plays dances.

For more than 35 years, the celebrated Louisiana band has blended the lively Cajun traditions of southwest Louisiana into music that defies easy category. Whether they're nodding to Texas swing or Mississippi blues, however, BeauSoleil emphasizes vivacious melodies and lively performances meant to move its audiences.

The band's latest album, "Alligator Purse," is structured like an "old-time, traditional French dance in southwest Louisiana," says fiddler and frontman Michael Doucet.

"There might be a ballad that started the dance, then a quadrille that works into a polka, then a two-step, a one-step and a waltz. You go through all these different styles and all these different moods like you do every day. It tells a story."

BeauSoleil walks a fine line between preservation and innovation: The group not only practices Cajun musical traditions, but puts personal touches on the songs.

"You have to know where you came from to see where you're going," says Doucet, who grew up in rural Louisiana. "Nothing is created out of thin air. It has a history, and our history is pretty amazing and diverse."

That history will be on display when BeauSoleil plays the 21st Annual Louisiana Swamp Romp with Marcia Ball, the Dirty Dozen Brass Band, and Rosie Ledet & the Zydeco Playboys. "It's wonderful to be there and know that so many talented people come from the same state and play such a variety of music," Doucet explains. "It's a kinship."

While BeauSoleil presents a master class in the diversity of Louisiana music, its shows are primarily an opportunity to dance. "For me," Doucet says, "it's always spontaneous, especially if there's an audience listening. That generates a very different kind of energy — a visceral exchange between people making music and people reacting to it."

On the Road Without a Map

Most of folk-punk band Defiance, Ohio sets out to rock out

Music

Planning a tour is tough enough. But planning a tour when you're not sure whether everyone in the group is able to come along is a struggle. Folk-punk band Defiance, Ohio has gotten used to.

"It could vary a little along the way, but it's still up in the air right now," bassist and vocalist Ryan Woods said of the band's lineup for its five-week tour, which stops Sunday at the backstage of the Black Cat in Washington, D.C. "A couple members are in school or have gone through changes or moved, and it's a little bit of a hectic summer for everybody."

MAX SCHWARTZ

Even without a couple of members, Defiance, Ohio makes surging, frenetic punk.

Since starting out in 2002, the band's six members have constantly been scattered around Ohio, fostering in each of them a certain creative style that enables them to brainstorm better when they're together. That mentality especially came into play when the group was working on its upcoming fourth album, "Midwestern Minutes," which comes out in July.

"I think we spent a lot of time talking about how we wanted things to be orchestrated," Woods said. "I think in the past it was a bit more thrown together; we'd just show up and end up with what we had. ... It feels very finished to us."

And even though a member or two may be missing Sunday, Woods hopes that sense of completion will come across at the show.

"It's always been one of the places where the people who come to the shows tend to be a little more diverse in age and in other ways than other shows, and where I feel like there's a real connection, maybe from listeners just being so close to things that are going on politically," Woods said of playing in Washington, D.C. 'Pieces' of the Counterculture

The film that gave Jack Nicholson his star turn provides no 'Easy' answers

Film

Jack Nicholson's supporting role in 1969's "Easy Rider" may have brought him to a national audience, but it was his starring role in the 1970 character study "Five Easy Pieces" that helped establish him as a major force in Hollywood. In the drama, Nicholson portrays Bobby Dupea, a former child piano prodigy turned blue-collar worker who gets summoned back home when his father falls ill.

Screenwriter Carole Eastman's episodic narrative unfolds slowly and allows filmgoers to get to know Dupea much the way people get to know others in real life. Director Bob Rafelson keeps the story rooted in matter-of-factness with his also nominated for four Academy Awards: Best Picture, Actor, Supporting Actress and Screenplay.

The most remembered scene in "Five Easy Pieces" is its famous "chicken salad" segment, in which Nicholson attempts to order an off-menu piece of toast at a roadside diner and gets exasperated at a waitress who won't honor his request. Karen Black takes a notable turn as Nicholson's small-town, big-haired girlfriend, and future stars Sally Struthers and Toni Basil also play small but interesting roles.

Perhaps the most haunting aspect of "Five Easy Pieces" is the way it doesn't attempt to lure viewers in with any obvious messages or even a clean resolution. This is life, the filmmakers seem to say: Deal with it. TONY SCLAFANI

The bleak landscape should resonate more clearly than ever when the American Film Institute debuts a digitally restored, 40th-anniversary 35mm print on Friday. The upgrade is a testament to the film's influence.

In 2000, the Library of Congress deemed "Five Easy Pieces" worthy of preservation in the United States National Film Registry. Besides kick-starting Nicholson's career, it helped usher in a new realism in filmmaking that informed other classic Nicholson films, notably "Chinatown." It was

Tommy Wiseau ponders the appeal of his unlikely hit movie 'The Room'

Film

Seven years ago, independent filmmaker Tommy Wiseau released a low-budget relationship drama called "The Room." Originally, it played at only one theater in Los Angeles, but slowly, the film garnered a huge cult audience. Wiseau has been screening the film across the country at ever-larger venues, and this month he will show it at the AFI Silver in Silver Spring. We spoke to the director about his most famous movie and his current projects.

What does it mean to be showing "The Room" at prestigious movie houses?

You know, it doesn't matter where we screen; I am thrilled to be part of the industry, and it seems to me that that is where "The Room" is going right now. I'm thrilled to be a part of it. I like Q&A and I like people. We have so many screenings. I think everyone should see "The Room." My goal, I don't know if you know, is to have a bigger screening in the Staples Center and, actually, in New York City I'd like to have Yankee Stadium.

Seven years after the quiet release of his relationship drama, Tommy Wiseau (shown here in the film) is still tearing us apart.

"The Room" has really taken off over the last few years. How has your life changed?

You know what? My life did not change so much, except I have more work. But you see, I'm a filmmaker, and keep in mind, "The Room" is 12 years of my work. I've been working very hard on this project, and it did not happen by accident. I'm doing everything the same basic way as the studios do. ... The difference is that they have more resources than I do.

Why do you think audiences connect so strongly with this movie?

"The Room" was designed by me to provoke the audience in a way we are not used to."

People should understand "The Room" relates to symbolism within the film. People don't grasp this, because it's too much. Let me give you an example: Let's say you read a book or an article, and people talk about numbers and you say, "Wait a minute. What are they talking about? I'm just completely lost." This is by design. "The Room" was designed by me to provoke the audience in a way we are not used to. People don't realize the symbolism in the movie, but again, my take on this is, you may not like my movie, but I am 100 percent confident that you will relate to it.

4 Friend of A Friendo

Low-fi popsters Friendo keep it simple: Three pals, a 4-track and a penchant for Slint and Sonic Youth. The trio, featuring the drummer from Canadian crooners Women, have released their debut as an old-school cassette — perfect for dreaming under the boardwalk this summer.

2 The Sound of Pride

With gay wedding bells ringing in the District, there's reason to be extra proud during this year's Capital Pride festival. Before Saturday's parade, check out Friday's Capital Pride Women's Concert, where Bitch and local rockers the Pushovers will perform with R&B sensation Goapele. The daughter of an exiled South African political activist, Goapele has supported human rights causes at rallies and benefits all over the world with her music. → 9:30 Club, 815 V St. NW; Fri., 8 p.m., $30; 877-435-9849.

A black and white movie poster for "Prince of Persia: The Sands of Time". The central figure is Jake Gyllenhaal as the Prince, wearing ornate armor and looking intensely at the viewer. To his left is Ben Kingsley as the Genie, and to his right is Gemma Arterton as the Princess. The background shows a desert landscape with a large, ornate sword blade in the foreground. The title "PRINCE OF PERSIA" is written in large, bold letters across the middle, with "THE SANDS OF TIME" in smaller letters below it. At the top, there are three quotes: "THRILLING!" by Pete Hammond from BoxOffice Magazine, "LOADED WITH ACTION AND HUMOR" by Peter Travers from Rolling Stone, and "A LOT OF FUN" by A.O. Scott from The New York Times.

Good paella, whether made with traditional rice or with vermicelli noodles, sports a layer of crunchy starch on the bottom and a riot of saffron-tinged proteins on top. Right, María Jose San Román with a dried chile.

A Spanish Star Sizzles

Chef María Jose San Román comes to D.C. to celebrate and put a new twist on paella

No Rice; No Problem

When she pulls up the sleeve of her chef's coat, a small but bright tattoo on María Jose San Román's wrist becomes visible. It's a purple saffron flower, the red stigmas of which are among the biggest exports of her hometown, Alicante, Spain. The Mediterranean port also exports numerous varieties of rice. It's no surprise, then, that San Román's restaurant, La Taberna del Gourmet, makes a mean paella — a dish that couldn't exist without those two ingredients.

San Román's paella expertise is what brings her to Washington. She's the guest chef this summer at Jaleo's annual Paella Festival.

San Román came relatively late to the chef's table. With no formal culinary education, she began training at the age of 40, after her kids were grown up. She worked under some of the world's most renowned chefs, including Joan Roca of El Celler de Can Roca (voted the world's fifth-best restaur-rant by Restaurant Magazine).

This October, the ink from San Román's saffron tattoo will drip onto the pages of a cookbook, "El Libro de Azafran." It will triple as a recipe book, a history lesson, and a how-to guide about all things saffron.

You can taste San Román's recipes at all three Jaleo locations until June 20, when the festival ends.

Perfect Paella

Instead of the stove, try the grill. Since it can be hard to get enough heat from a standard kitchen's electric or gas stove, San Román recommends cooking the paella on the grill. "The best rices are cooked on the fire," she says.

Toast the vermicelli. When using vermicelli noodles, whether alone or with rice, you'll get a better texture and flavor if you stick them in the oven before making your paella. Toast them enough so they brown a bit.

The higher the heat, the better. Before putting your paella pan on the stove, in the oven, or on the grill, make sure you always preheat.

Afterward, cool down quickly. When your paella is done, cool it down as quickly as possible, or it will continue to cook and get overdone. San Román suggests wetting a thick cloth with cold water and setting the paella down on top of the cloth.

How did you get involved with Jaleo's Paella Festival?

José [Andrés] thought I was the right person to come because my restaurant has been named the best tapas bar in Spain. ... And we are in the region where the paella was born, [Valencia].

Describe your cooking style. I try to make the traditional modern. People have in their mind what they've eaten forever, so that same taste must be there so they feel comfortable. It's a little bit old and a little bit new.

What's an example of that?

My vegetarian paella. We cook it as a traditional flat paella, and then we take vegetables that we've already cooked [slightly] and we put them all over the paella when it's finished. And then we mix it. So you get the freshness of the spinach and the green beans and the capsicum.

Your restaurants in Alicante are on the water. How important is fresh seafood to your kitchens?

We only play with quality. It's secondary to talk about recipes. ... We have a fisherman who comes in the morning ... and, late in the afternoon, another fisherman comes. The fishes come alive. The prawns, the langoustine — they're moving. This means you have to do nothing. Just a little bit of olive oil and grill them.

What's your favorite dish to make in your restaurant?

Paella. Vermicelli paella is one of my favorites.

What's your favorite dish to make at home?

I have to tell you, I love fried eggs. Fried eggs and tomatoes.

What's the hardest Spanish dish to make at home?

Paella [laughs]! It's a matter of fire. At home, you don't have a very strong fire. It's like with the Chinese wok. If you don't have the fire, what do you need the wok for?

How's the paella festival going?

I'm very proud to be in Washington with José Andrés, who is really somebody I love. I think he's doing a great, great job. We are very proud of him in Spain.

SUEMEDA SOOD

Always use saffron, but handle it with care.

San Román has countless tips for using saffron. The most important one is to buy the freshest whole saffron you can get and store it properly. Since saffron is expensive, Ramón recommends purchasing the small single packets on an as-needed basis.

Use dried capsicum to add sweetness. In addition to saffron, San Román uses dried red bell pepper in every one of her paella dishes.

When you sit down to eat, know which bits are the best. Be the first to get the bits usually saved for last — the crunchy parts that stick to the pan. In Spain, San Román says, "This is the part that everyone fights over!"

At Pizzeria Orso, classic recipies get a contemporary spin

Piece of the Pie

This is not your grandmother's pizza. Or maybe it is, as old processes meet new combinations at Pizzeria Orso, the recently opened sister to 2941 Restaurant.

To create his signature 12-inch Neapolitan pizzas, pizzaiolo Edan MacQuaid uses a 3-ton handmade volcanic brick oven. It bakes the pizzas at 800 degrees for 90 seconds, which means toppings don't have time to get "stressed," MacQuaid says. "You won't find that the grease has separated from the solids in the cheese or that mushrooms are dried out. Everything's going to come out soft and fresh and aromatic."

The dough never touches a fridge and is mixed in a diving-arm mixer that simulates kneading. "It incorporates air into the dough and allows the flour to absorb more water, which leads to a more interesting structure and texture," says MacQuaid, 36.

The result is signature dishes like the classic margherita with San Marzano tomatoes, buffalo offers classic fried Neapolitan dishes like potato croquettes and fried risotto stuffed with buffalo mozzarella or mushroom ragu.

MacQuaid, who runs the place with his wife, Thea, is no stranger to pizza in D.C. He started at Pizzeria Paradiso in Dupont Circle in 1992 before being invited to open 2 Amys in 2000 and to consult on RedRocks.

Undeterred by the area's surplus of upper-crust pizza places, MacQuaid says he'll get his slice of the pie. "I think that the level of dedication and our methods and the products we use are going to set us apart."

'True Blood': Are You the Type?

"True Blood" returns June 13. In my home, the HBO vampire saga is a polarizing show. I am hooked. My wife can't stand to be in the room when it's on. Funny, that's how I feel when she watches "The Marriage Ref."

This made me realize every show has an Unwatchability Index. Consider "Ref." For me: Braying host + dumb couples + divorced celebs judging a marriage = MUST-FLEE TV!!

For "True Blood" virgins who wonder whether Season 3 is the time to jump in, here's a guide to rate the show as Watchable or Unwatchable, based on elements from this year's premiere. Earn a point if you're enticed, zero if you're neutral, minus one if you say "Yuck."

Vampire hickeys.

Bloody tears.

Headless, handless corpse.

Hunky man whose test anxiety produces dream where the test is in a strange alphabet and he is pantsless.

Organized, highly trained werewolves with no fear of death.

Organized, highly trained werewolves with no fear of death who don biker garb whilst human.

Multiple confusing plotlines in head-spinningly rapid succession.

Lady's head literally spun around by enraged lover in vampire-on-vampire tryst.

Add up your score. Plus one or more — congrats, you're a fledgling True Bloodie! Anything in the minuses — "Marriage Ref" reruns air at NBC.com.

'True Blood' returns for a third season of sexy Southern gore on Sunday night

Television

If you aren't a fangbanger sympathizer yet, the third season premiere of "True Blood" will probably make you one.

Thanks to our pop culture's healthy interest in the supernatural, "True Blood" — an adaptation of the "Southern Vampire Mysteries" novels by author Charlaine Harris — has become HBO's latest phenomenon. With its dreamy stars, Southern accents and graphic nudity, the show has attracted millions of viewers, earned a Golden Globe and an Emmy, and starts the third season off with a blood-soaked bang. The episode, which airs at 9 p.m. on Sunday, ties up some of the second season finale's loose ends and introduces a host of new plot developments.

The episode, "Bad Blood," begins where September's finale left off: Though vampire Bill Compton (Stephen Moyer) has just proposed to human Sookie Stackhouse (Anna Paquin), he's dragged off before she's able to return from a bathroom break to say yes. Overwhelmed by his kidnapping, Sookie tries to learn more information about where he's gone, but the local police force is unwilling to help because they don't consider Bill a real human, and vampire sheriff Eric Northman (Alexander Skarsgård) is too wrapped up in his own attraction to Sookie to care about her concern for her beau.

Part of what makes "True Blood" so addictive is the fine line it walks between supernatural and human: Whether it's vampires worrying about their bank accounts — "Hell hath no fury like a vampire queen broke," snarls Vampire Queen Sophie-Anne (Evan Rachel Wood) — or humans fretting over the loss of their lovers, it's a balancing act that suggests the new season of "True Blood" will be electrifying. Some of that excitement will come from a couple new characters, too, including vampire Franklin Mott (James Frain) and the rugged Alcide

Characters

New Furry Friends

This season of "True Blood" welcomes another breed of supernatural creature: werewolves. It's all to keep it interesting, Anna Paquin tells USA Today. Herveaux (Joe Manganiello); both suggest more fantastical twists and turns along the way.

Of course, the thrills don't hurt, either, unless you're offended by blood, lots of female nudity and a pleasant amount of shirtless Skarsgård — which, if you are, you wouldn't be watching "True Blood" anyway, would you?

The Hype You Can Believe In

Grace Potter's new mainstream sound is a real knockout

Album Review

This time the hype is justified.

Ever since Grace Potter & the Nocturnals went from being an unassuming indie jam band to signing with high-profile Hollywood Records, the Vermont-based group has been getting a major marketing push. Unfortunately, the band's last studio effort, "This Is Somewhere," didn't live up to its press notices; its best tracks sounded like Sheryl Crow's worst leftovers. But Potter and company still managed to keep a high profile because of their energetic stage shows and Potter's feisty persona.

With this self-titled effort, out

ADRIEN BROOK

Grace Potter and the Nocturnals have undergone a complete image overhaul.

Grace Potter & the Nocturnals

now, Hollywood Records has gone all out in an apparent effort to land the band in the Top 40. It paired the group with producer Mark Batson, best known for his work with the Dave Matthews Band, Eminem and Jay-Z. Batson co-wrote a few tracks, and his influence has seemed to help the band focus harder on composition and arrangements.

The album cover also shows that there are other changes afoot. Not only are there a few new band members, but Potter has traded in her flannel shirts and jeans for short skirts and high heels. She's also had her hair done up so that it looks like it's out of a Maxim photo shoot. Hey, if she's gonna take her place alongside Top 40 rockers such as the Fray and Kings of Leon, she's gotta look the part, right?

The big surprise is that it all works. The record's energy level surpasses anything the band has ever done, Potter's singing is better than ever, and the songwriting finally matches the group's instrumental abilities. Longtime fans needn't be alienated either: Batson hasn't shoehorned the group into some unsuitable format. What he's done is amplified and sharpen what was already there.

School's Out Forever

It's the time of year when mortarboards sail into the sky, placing punctuation marks on graduations across the country and — if you watch the right movie — on your television screen. A great many films have focused on the elation that comes with receiving a diploma and the anxiety that follows. Here's a list of solid graduation genre films, all available on DVD and/or Blu-ray. JEN CHANEY (THE WASHINGTON POST)

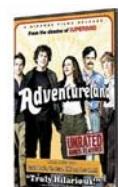

The Graduate

When Benjamin Braddock (Dustin Hoffman) returns to his parents' home after graduating from college, all he has is a festering sense of doubt. His method of coping — entering into an affair with Mrs. Robinson (Anne Bancroft) while falling for her daughter — is not the best. But in the hands of Oscar-winning filmmaker Mike Nichols, it makes a heck of a movie.

Adventureland

Greg Mottola's low-key indie from last year accomplishes something that films about the '80s rarely do: It captures the early MTV era accurately. Another reason to catch it on DVD: The film coaxes fully realized performances from Kristen Stewart and Jesse Eisenberg, as a fresh-from-university guy who puts his future on hold in favor of amusement park employment.

Into the Wild

Sean Penn directs this moving adaptation of the book, based on the true story of Christopher McCandless (Emile Hirsch), a young man who earned his degree from Emory University, then immersed himself in the remote Alaskan wilderness. Learning about McCandless' experience may spark soul-searching about what it means to pursue an unconventional path.

Say Anything

Is any high school graduation scene more memorable than the one Cameron Crowe captures in "Say Anything ..." complete with a senior class sing-along to "The Greatest Love of All"? But it's Crowe's obvious affection for kickboxer Lloyd Dobler (John Cusack) and valedictorian Diane Court (Ione Skye) that keeps us coming back for viewings.

Ask American Student Assistance About Student Loans Deferment and Forbearance

Dear American Student Assistance:

I am trying to avoid defaulting on my federal student loans. Can you tell me the difference between deferment and forbearance?

Sincerely,
Brenda

Dear Brenda:

Deferment and forbearance have different eligibility requirements and interest accrual rules. Both allow you to temporarily postpone federal student loan payments—and both are preferable to default.

As a federal student loan borrower, you may be eligible for deferment if you are unemployed, experiencing economic hardship, or meet certain other criteria. Interest does not accrue on subsidized Stafford loans during the deferment period.

Forbearance is granted at the discretion of your lender or servicer (the company that sends you your student loan bills), so only they can tell you if you're eligible. Interest accrues during forbearance, and you are responsible for paying it. If it is not paid during the forbearance period, interest is generally capitalized (added to your principal balance), increasing the amount you owe.

Loving Couple Seeks Egg Donor

I am a happily married woman with a full and interesting life. My husband and I are blessed with close and loving families with many nieces and nephews. Even though we cherish the time spent with our families, we still long for a child of our own.

Luckily, I can become pregnant, but I need an Egg Donor's help. Our dream Donor is 21-31, intelligent, fair-skinned, small-to-medium boned, with an excellent personal and family health history.

Egg Donor Needed $8,500 COMPENSATION

We want our donor to have the best care and support and so we have chosen a small, hands-on agency instead of a big clinic. Interested? Please email my attorney at Creative Family Connections:
